

The Stonington Historical Society has a part-time prospect researcher position open in its development department. Candidates should have significant experience in aggregating information from a broad spectrum of sources. This staff person researches, organizes, and evaluates a prospect's financial capacity, ability to give, and willingness to give. They should also be able to identify a prospect's charitable interests and outline the history of their relationship with the Historical Society, its board and programs.

The researcher will produce in-depth, well-written reports on prospects based on a combination of data drawn from the donor data base, available financial records, real estate ownership and other markers of high net worth individuals.

This research can be prepared onsite and remotely using a variety of data bases including iWave and other cloud-based resources.

Candidates should submit a letter of interest and current resume to: Josh Adams, Director of Development and Communications, jadams@stoningtonhistory.org
